A man [not a brute] Homo, itis, c. mortalis.

*Because she was born a man, quia homo nata est. That all men may see, ut omnes mortales videre possint. I have made a man of him, hominem inter homines feci. || Man propheib, but God disposed, humana confina divinitus gubernantur. A man may ask what you have to do with her, roget quis quid tibi cum illa. He is not yet grown a man, adhuc prætextatus est, nondum prætextam deposuit. But what should a man do? verum quid facias? [Prov.] A man, or a mouse, aut Cesar, aut nullus; rex, aut asinus. One man's meat is another man's poison, quot homines, tot sententiae. They were all born to a man, ad unum omnes interficiuntur. bet, ne armis decernatur. Every man hath his humour, suus cuique mos est.

*No man, Neque, nemo, itis, c. nullus, non quicquam. That no man hurt another, ne cui quis noceat. There is no man I would now more fain see, nemo est quem ego magis nunc videre cuperem. Be not greedy of another man's, ne sis alieni appetens. A creature capable of a noble mind, animal altæ capax mentis. I would not have you so careless of other things, nolim ceterarum rerum te ita socordem. I am afraid lest any of you should think so, vereor ne cui vestrum ita videatur. But that signifying to the end that, denoting time to come, and coming before a verb which signifieth to desire, fear, command, labour, take care, &c. must be made by ut; as, I desire that you will act the play, ut tu id volam agas, volo. I am afraid that this stranger will not stand it out to my father, metuo ut iussit holpe. He gave orders to me, that it should be bought, mihi mandavit, ut emeretur. I laboured that you should care, laboravi, ut vos decerneretis. Take care, that you preserve your health, cura, ut valeas.

The looks, et a face, generally show persons thoughts, vultus autem sententia plerumque indicant. He hath a fine way of expressing his thoughts, cogitata mentis peritose loquitur. He fixed his thought rebellly upon this affair, in illam rem omnem mentem suam & locavit. He turned his thoughts from that object, ab ea re animum vel cogitationem suam abiecit, abiecit, avertit. That presently came into my thought, id statim mihi in mentem venit. I never had any such thought, quod nunquam opinatus fui. I will speak my thoughts, dicam quod sentio. But I have these thoughts, sed ego hoc haurior. But if he have not the same thoughts, sin aliter eius sententia est. How often have you entertained that thought? quoties in eam cogitationem venisti? That matter had never once entered into your thoughts, ne quidem in ejus rei cogitationem incidere. This thought had been thoroughly fixed in his mind, hæc cogitatio penitus infederat. He hath discovered his thoughts to me, se mihi aperuit; suam mihi mentem aperuit. ¶ Therefore he employed all his thoughts about setting his country at liberty, itaque ad patriam liberandam omni ferebatur cogitatione, C. I desire you to take no thought about it, animo esse otioso impero, I take but little thought about what people may say of me, de fama nihil sanè laboro. I take more thought for the welfare of the state, than for my own, magis de salute reipublicæ, quàm de mea pertorbor. He taketh much thought about you, ex te illum afficit sollicitudo. I thought she had been my fellow servant, conservam credidi. ¶ It fell out better than I thought it would have done, successit opinione melius. This was my thought, hæc animo meo sententia infedit. I never thought on it, me fugerat. If I thought good, si mihi videretur. No body thought well of it, ea res omnium judicio reprehendebatur. He thought none so good as himself, neminem dignitate secum exæquari videbatur. He thought it enough for the present, satis habebat in præsentia. He ought not to be thought liberal, non debet liberalis haberi, videri, existimari. ¶ So that they two were thought to be sisters, adeo ut ambæ sorores crederentur.*
